When it comes to renovation, a designer's value is apparent in the expertise and vision one can bring. But another advantage that is sometimes overlooked is sourcing. A professional designer has trade-only access to it all. Take Laura Iverson, for example. The principal designer and owner of Laura Iverson Design is a leading resource and tastemaker for high-quality custom furniture, accessories, art, tile, finishes and more. A full-service boutique design studio specializing in commercial and residential interiors, LID is deeply involved in the industry and uses that inside knowledge and admission to further the goals of its clients. "Whether we're working on a single room or an entire home, we thoughtfully handle each stage of the design process with the utmost care, expertise and precision," Iverson says. "Our clients remain clients for life, trusting me to design their mountain homes, city pads, coastal bungalows and primary residences."

"Renovation takes time, good planning and a stellar team that works well together—consider yourself a part of that team."

WALLPAPER WONDERS

"Wallcoverings are still trending and what we have access to in the trade is unbelievable," Iverson enthuses. "There are so many styles and finishes and unique and custom options available. Whether installed on a ceiling, as a paneled art piece or in an entire room, wallcoverings will elevate any space." One of Iverson's favorite inventive ways to incorporate them is by lining the back of a bookcase.

ONE-ROOM RENOS

According to Iverson, some of the best projects to take on are organization-heavy spaces. "These seemingly mundane rooms are opportunities to bring energy, style and ease to the home," she says. "I love approaching them with a fresh perspective and providing my client with thoughtful details they appreciate on a daily basis." She shares her top picks for rooms to update.
